The Missing Post Office (from Ehime Shimbun, March 28, 2015)

"A father wrote postcards addressed to his 11 year-old son who had passed away 19 years ago.

He wrote them every time he thought of his son, remembering the days they had spent together and all his son's expressions.

Every time he wrote a postcard he would put it in the post. He would write as many as 45 postcards in just half a year."

..... When I read this story I couldn't help but feel sad.

Those postcards can never be delivered, but fortunately "the missing post office" does exist and can accept such postcards that have no delivery address.

It can be found on Awashima Island in the Seto Inland Sea (Located in Mitoyo City of Kagawa Prefecture) The post office on Awashima Island was opened by Ms. Saya Kubota, a contemporary artist. A lot of drift wood and general flotsam is cast ashore on Awashima Island.

Ms Kubota perceived that on such an island, "We human beings are also part of a larger scale current".

She took advantage of the Setouchi International Art Festival as an opportunity to renovate the former post office building.

Mr. Katsuhisa Nakata who had worked at the post office for 45 years is now working there as the post master.

The addressees of the postcards delivered to the post office vary widely.

For example, family members who have passed away, lovers who have drifted apart or been split up, the oneself of past or future, and the tools they had used before but not used now anymore. The number of them has reached 3346 in a little more than one year.

They are kept in a tin box so that anyone can freely read them and a great number of people visit the post office from all over the country.

After identifying the postcards which had been delivered to 'the missing post office' the father of the 11 year-old said with a smile, "I feel that I can accept the situation now".

Similarly, one wife feels at ease now, believing that the postcard she sent to her husband who had passed away was surely delivered because it has never been returned as "Address Unknown".

Deep sadness may be consoled through the acceptance of others. Writing a postcard may help them move forward without realizing instead of drifting aimlessly.

Zuio-ji Temple

Zuio-ji temple, built in 1448, is one of the main temples of the Soto sect of Zen Buddhism. The Zen training center of the temple grounds was opened in 1897. It is the only such facility in this region of Japan, and so many apprentice monks come there from far and wide to progress in their studies. They can be seen walking along the street in Winter as part of their training program.

Visitors can participate in Zazen meditation sessions very early or late every day and accommodation is available to those wishing to stay overnight. For more information about the sessions or accommodation details, visit Zuio-ji temple website.

In the temple grounds is a large ginkgo tree believed to be about 1000 years old. It has been designated a natural monument by Ehime Prefecture. In the building behind the temple, there is a special revolving bookcase containing a complete set of the sacred Buddhist sutras. It has been designated a tangible cultural asset by Ehime Prefecture.

"Terakoya", the Learning Facility in Cambodia

(from Ehime Shimbun, March 10 2015)

In order to contribute to the improvement of elementary education in developing countries, the Niihama UNESCO Association established Rohal Terakoya, a learning facility in Cambodia in cooperation with Japan UNESCO Association. Children can learn there for free from September.

Rohal Village where they built the facility is in the northern state of Siem Reap state which is the poorest region of Cambodia.

The literacy rate for villagers 15 years old and over is 74%.

Although there are public schools, there are many children who cannot go to school because of family problems or because they have been forced to quit school.

The total cost of the facility construction is 5 million yen.

Niihama UNESCO Association contributed part of the founding cost, about 1 million yen as the project commemorates the 10th anniversary of the organization's foundation.

Other UNESCO associations and some enterprises in Japan also made contributions supporting them.

The facility is a one-story house made of steel frame and bricks and has a ground area of 810 square meters.

It has 2 classrooms and a library. Local residents run the school and plan to open a class for children who aim to return to school and also a literacy class targeted at adults.
