Living like a foreigner

Nicole McCoy

This year I turned 24, which means that I had the privilege of participating in the Setsubun ceremony at Ishizuchi Shrine. I was chatting with a lady as we were getting ready at the shrine (she is 48 years old this year) and she told me that this was her first time going through the Setsubun ceremony.

It surprised me that someone would pass up this rare event so many times. The opportunity to be a participant in this ceremony only comes once every 12 years. For me, a foreigner who likely won't be in Japan 12 years from now, it was a once in a lifetime opportunity. It seemed strange to me that someone who had the chance to be involved in such an interesting tradition would pass it up.

A few weeks later, I was talking to a Japanese person who was interested in going to Canada. She asked me "I've heard that the Yukon is very beautiful. Is that true?" To which I replied "I don't know. I've never been there." It occurred to me then that I was guilty of the same behavior as the woman from the shrine.

This is my second time living abroad, and both times I've found the time to visit the nearby attractions and participate in any cultural event I heard of. So why have I allowed myself to make excuses not to explore Canada?

I've been so blessed, living in a country that is full of natural beauty, and yet I've seen so little of it. Why is it that we will travel great distances to see other cities and countries, while ignoring and neglecting our local treasures?

To anyone reading this, I challenge you to think about Ehime and Shikoku as though you were a foreigner here. Think about the places you would recommend to a tourist. Do some research on upcoming cultural events in your area. Think about local restaurants that you've heard about or a camping spot you've been meaning to visit.

Now make a list. A physical list, with a pen and paper of all of these things you've come up with. Divide this list into three groups:

1. Things you can do in an evening; a walk in a nearby park, a trip to the ocean, a coffee at a cafe that's caught your eye. I want you to do two things from this list every week.
2. Things you can do in a weekend; day trips, festivals and overnight stays. Choose one of these to do per month. And finally
3. Things that take a few days or a week. Maybe you want to take a trip around Shikoku or go camping or even start your 88 temple pilgrimage. Now look forward in your calendar to your next holiday. Fill in your breaks with trips and adventures. Take the time to discover the amazing things that Shikoku has to offer, because it truly is a privilege to live here.

In August, I will go back to Canada. I want to explore my province as though I were a foreigner there, taking advantage of every opportunity for a new experience, and I challenge you to do the same here in Ehime.

Hi everyone. My name is Nicole McCoy. I'm from Alberta, Canada and currently live and teach English in Saijo. ---

Strawberry Picking in Saijo

(from Hoo-JA! February 27, 2016)

“ひのいちご^{えん}園 “、Hino Strawberry Farm, is located to the south of the Supermarket Fuji Saijo Tamatsu. It is near the Sangyo-doro and has easy access from Niihama. The owner loved strawberries so much that he opened his own strawberry farm in 2006. He has been making every effort to produce very delicious strawberries. Strawberries from his farm are very juicy and red as they are given plenty of good water from Mt. Ishizuchi.

You need to walk a little to the strawberry greenhouse after checking in. So you should bring an umbrella with you on a rainy day.

You can enjoy strawberry picking in the greenhouse in any weather. You can move by wheel chair or with a stroller without any trouble because it is barrier-free. Once you enter the strawberry greenhouse, you can eat as many as you like without any time limit. You do not have to crouch to pick them because they are cultivated in elevated beds. Please try all 6 kinds of strawberries and find your favorite. The temperature inside the greenhouse is warm on a fine day even in March. Layers you can easily take off are recommended. It is OK to bring something to drink and eat into the greenhouse. But I recommend you enjoy the taste of fresh strawberries.

From an ALT's blog

Before I came to Japan, I didn't know any Japanese. The thought of moving somewhere I didn't speak the language terrified me, and when I got here, I knew I had to start learning.

I've studied pretty hard so far. I read a textbook, use flashcards, and struggle through NHK Easy articles (with the help of a good online dictionary). Given that when I first got to Japan I could only say 今日は I have come pretty far in the past few months. But it's easy to forget that.

In August, a few weeks after coming to Japan, I tried (and failed) to speak Japanese in Kaldi.

I had seen sign that read アイスコーヒー, and decided that a drink of iced coffee would be nice. I managed to tell the clerk that I wanted "iced coffee please," but couldn't understand her response, and just said "はい" in reply — a bad habit I've gotten into when speaking Japanese. It turned out, the sign I saw was not for a glass of iced coffee, but instead a bag of cold-brew coffee grounds.

I was too embarrassed to say anything, and I'm not sure I would have been able to anyway. I took home half a kilogram of ground coffee when I just wanted one drink. I'm still far from being fluent in Japanese, but I can answer and ask basic questions and make small talk now. At an enkai I went to at work, one of the teachers complimented my Japanese, and when I brushed her off, she reminded me just how far I have come. I may make a lot of mistakes when I talk in Japanese, but I am learning how to communicate, and that's what matters.
