Mooncake Festival

Grace Liew

Malaysia is a multi-cultural country. Among the many festivals celebrated in Malaysia is the Mooncake Festival which falls on the fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Chinese calendar. Fortunately this year, the Mooncake Festival is in September and I had the chance to celebrate with my family because I am back home during the summer holiday.

Let me tell you a little about the history of this festival. There are several stories explaining the origin of the Mooncake Festival. Children are told that the Moon Fairy comes out to dance on the moon on that day. Another story tells us how ten suns appeared together and the emperor had ordered an archer to shoot down the extra nine suns. The mission was accomplished and the archer was given pill to make him immortal. Instead his wife ate the pill and she flew all the way to the moon. She is supposed to be most beautiful on the fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Chinese lunar calendar.

The celebration of the Mooncake Festival has a political theory too. The people of Chinese origin in China wanted to overthrow the foreign rulers. They sent messages inserted in the mooncakes calling for a revolution against the foreign rulers and the restoration of Chinese control over their country. Today the Chinese celebrate the Mooncake Festival by dancing and feasting. The tradition mooncakes with varied fillings must. We can see mooncakes packed in boxes beings offered as gifts. I love the ones that are filled with salted duck egg yolks.

The most interesting part is the lantern parade by children carrying lanterns of various designs. When I was younger, I used to carry the multi-patterned lanterns in a single file and walk down the streets with my friends in the neighborhood. This festival brings the people together in one's neighborhood and strengthens the bonds of friendship. At night the families will get together for family prayers and feast together. These activities during Mooncake Festival brings the families together. It has become truly Malaysian because we can also see non-Chinese buying mooncakes and lanterns for their children to join in the lantern parade together with their Chinese friends. I hope these traditions remain strong in our roots because it symbolizes unity and prosperity in the Malaysian culture and I am very proud to introduce this beautiful tradition to my friends in Japan.

Ms. Grace Liew is the fifth year student of the Department of Mechanical Engineering at Niihama Technical College.

About wearing a mask

(from Ehime Shimbun February 13,2017)

The flu is spreading nationwide. I often encounter people wearing white surgical masks. They are not only people infected themselves, but also those who wish to prevent flu infection.

If they pull a cap over their eyes and cover their face with a scarf, I cannot tell who they are and fail to greet them.

From a different viewpoint , this is the best way to remain anonymous in a crowd. Decades ago when I was young, only sick people wore masks, so my classmates were kind to me when I wore one. Since disposable masks became easily available, we have started using them more often. Women take advantage of wearing masks to hide their face with no make-up. You can also keep yourself warm when you sleep by wearing a mask to keep moisture in your throat. I love disposal masks as they are clean and convenient.

But I have some anxiety about wearing a mask. When I am in a crowd with a mask, I have a strange feeling as if I were an invisible person, completely melted into the surroundings. It makes me scared to find myself speaking less and wearing a down-and-cut facial expression.
